The Midnight Oil Artisan Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 430 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.0in. We live in an age of miracles. Progress is taking us to new realms of comfort and success, yet each day brings fresh fears and uncertainties. Time is speeding up. Time is running out. And things dont quite add up. How is it that the more we save on our shopping, the less we have left in the bank Our bathrooms have never been cleaner, but the oceans have never been dirtier. We can communicate at the speed of light but we are somehow forgetting how to think. This is our world - a world of paradox in which we have forgotten the wisdom of our ancestors and defy our own biology. We are going to live for ever. But we are too busy to stop and breathe. Into this world steps Trudi Larsson. Eleven years old, with blond plaits and wide, hazel eyes. Clever, curious and fatally rebellious. It is Christmas in Sweden and the Larssons mean to celebrate in style, but all is not well in the forest and, in any case, Trudi has her own agenda. With a new mobile phone in her pocket, she is about to make a terrible discovery. On a fragile planet with few choices left, technology offers magic solutions. But if technology can be re-mastered at the touch of a button, how can one know what is really true And what place is left for the old magic of the imagination These are questions at the heart of Rosemary Paveys tale. For Trudi, they become a battleground between the mythic values of her half-Sami grandfather and the machinations of a plot to steal the blueprint of life. Bees, stars and spindle-whorls. . . From Inca legend to...
