Excerpt: .myself to be entirely alone in this solitude, I was not a little astonished at seeing before me, at the very bottom of this desolate place, an exceedingly old and decrepit person seated upon the ground. He had a long silver beard, and still retained a few scanty hairs, which were white as snow, upon his polished crown. His dress was threadbare, and his complexion, though pale, received a sort of lustre from the sparkling benevolence which irradiated his whole countenance. He arose from his seat in the dust to welcome me, a brother wanderer, to his place of refuge; and, scarcely waiting till I had sat down by him, and explained as much of my situation as was necessary to account for my being in that place at such an hour, he produced a wallet, from which he drew a bottle of water and a dry crust, of which he pressed me to partake, with as much courtesy as would have served him had he been seated at the head of a royal banquet. If the hard crust which the stranger offered was not particularly inviting, the water was as acceptable to me as if it had been nectar from the cup of Hebe. And, when I had partaken of it, I entered into discourse with my companion, and won so entirely upon his confidence, that he presently commenced a detail of his history: for it seems that he was very old, and...
