HHS s goal is that all Americans will be able to electronically access their longitudinal health information, that is, their health information over time. HHS s efforts to achieve this goal include the Medicare EHR Program and other efforts to encourage providers to make patient health information available and for patients to access such information. GAO was asked to review the state of patients electronic access to their health information. This report (1) describes the electronic access to health information available to patients, and patients views of this access, (2) describes the extent to which patients electronically access their health information, and actions providers reported taking to encourage such access, and (3) evaluates HHS s efforts to advance patients ability to electronically access their health information. GAO analyzed data from HHS and other sources; reviewed applicable strategic planning documents; surveyed a generalizable sample of providers that participated in the Medicare EHR program; and interviewed HHS officials and a nongeneralizable sample of patients, providers, and health information technology product developers.
